

Limitation of access to information is a real risk to freedom. Is the having the power to disseminate information in the hands of a few in the best interests of the many? How many times will the truth be compromised or slanted or shaded if all the fountains of information are supplied by the same source? How will we know when we are really getting the truth, when there will be only handful of sources? Who will really benefit by this revision - the media conglomerates or the average citizen? I fear this may be the first step on a very slippery slope to the erosion of one of our freedoms.